Can a drill sergeant see a genius in the drilled cadet? Dr. Andrei Aleinikov, The Most Creative Man in the World, President of International Academy of Genius, says yes and shows to JROTC Instructors from DoD schools in Europe and Asia how to do it.

For Immediate Release

MONTGOMERY, Ala./EWorldWire/Feb. 27, 2006 --- Dr. Andrei Aleinikov, "The Most Creative Man in the World," father of Geniusology and designer of the Genius Education Methodology (GEM) spreads GEM to Europe to save geniuses in the U.S. Department of Defense schools.

When Dr. Aleinikov hears the phrase, "Old dogs can't learn new tricks," he counters that it depends on methodology. GEM is creating the mind changing effect in learners with success in 99.8 percent of children and 99.6 percent of adults.

After many successful workshops with the American JROTC Instructors at Maxwell Air Force Base, Alabama, military officials invited Dr. Aleinikov to have a workshop for European and Asian Instructors at Garmisch, Germany.

Responses to Dr. Aleinikov after a one and a half day workshop reflected overwhelmingly positive reaction. Here are what some participants wrote:

"The class was an eye-opening experience to new frontiers of education. There are numerous creative avenues I may try to experiment with in my class," says Scott Seibert.

"The 'Genius in Every Child' class was truly an eye-opening experience. With his teaching techniques, I should be a better teacher in the future," states Michael T. Copeland.

"My course evaluation is ultra positive. Dr. Aleinikov is a demonstrated genius. The tools he provided during the seminar are usable today and the future. The new insights are valuable tools for change in my teaching techniques. The learning environment was a genius one. Thanks," offers Curtis Han.
