

NEC Display Solutions Chooses E-World Recyclers To Manage Electronic Recycling Needs In Southern California

For Immediate Release

VISTA, Calif./EWORLDWIRE/April 10, 2007 --- Through the company's deep commitment to the environment, NEC Display Solutions has been a global leader in developing and promoting the green initiatives that many manufacturers are now adopting. Keeping electronic waste out of landfills and choosing a quality electronic waste recycler such as E-World Recyclers plays an important role in that environmental stewardship.

E-World Recyclers, located in Vista, Calif., provides NEC and other clients with innovative e-waste management and recycling services for the disposal of electronic equipment. Consumers interested in making socially responsible choices, as well as original equipment manufacturers seeking to minimize their effects on the environment, will find a solution at E-World for end-of life electronics.

Lyle DeStigter, chief operations officer and co-founder of E-World's 46,000 sq foot Southern California recycling facility, believes that the support from companies such as NEC Display Solutions is vital to the sustainability and growth of his business. "The addition of NEC to our growing list of clients is an important step in continuing the development of electronics recycling. The next generation of e-waste includes LCD displays, and we at E-World Recyclers are constantly researching the best ways to effectively recycle items like these for a cleaner, better tomorrow."

While differences of opinion exist across the United States in regards to whether electronic waste should be the responsibility of producers or consumers, NEC continues to be an advocate of the environment by identifying responsible disposal options for the waste generated from their operations. Says DeStigter, "The important point is that the waste is being taken care of and not creating a burden on the size and condition of the landfills we leave our future generations."
