For Immediate Release

SUCCASUNNA, N.J./EWORLDWIRE/June 18, 2008 --- Pace University student and Parsippany, N.J., resident Cindy Bahadur is taking the summer to closely scrutinize her vocation, to see if her true vision of becoming a broadcast journalist fits her better than her earlier academic pursuit of optometry. The highly energetic, eager-to-learn broadcast intern is framing her future in the news studio of World Internet Marketing in Succasunna.

Shifting public speaking into focus when her sights were previously set on prescriptions and pre-screening, Bahadur is now applying her budding talent to expanding her communications and presentation skills along with her on-camera persona, which are evolving rapidly. A few short weeks under the watchful eye of other anchors has helped her adjust to her new role in the company's in-house studio.

"My main goal in an internship such as this one is to fully insert myself in the experience and gain new contacts - to examine broadcasting more closely," said Bahadur. A key element to her success is her ability to seek out, accept and learn from constructive criticism.

"Taking on an internship is my way of approaching learning proactively, and adjusting and preparing for the real world. Working with the World Internet Marketing staff is helping me understand the demands of this career. The environment offers a dynamic space for students pursuing a range of majors from Journalism, to Marketing/P.R., Design, Technology and Human Resources."

"Students who recognize the value of a strong internship and want to gain hands-on experience and insight into a profession - while having fun doing what they love will be happy they chose World Internet Marketing. I know I am!"
